All staff working in general practice should be aware of what to do in case of a medical emergency.

While the medical care may ultimately reside with the GPs, there are various other responsibilities that need to be undertaken in cases of emergencies. This course will assist staff in identifying and planning for emergency situations in general practice.

Course outline

- Strategies to address various types of emergencies
- How to recognise an emergency patient
- Cardiopulmonary resuscitation
- What to do if a patient collapses in the waiting area
- The process of working with the ambulance service in an emergency
- How to support your GP following an emergency.

Presenter

Professor Hugh Grantham – Professor of Paramedics

Professor Hugh Grantham previously worked as the Medical Director, South Australian Ambulance Service until 2011. Professor Grantham has interests in clinical education, emergency medicine, disaster medicine and resuscitation. He is also the national educator for the advanced life support program (ALS) and senior instructor of ALS and early management of severe trauma (EMST) courses.
