Summary

I am a Specialist General Practitioner, practice owner, medical educator, academic and experienced board director with a strong record of leadership, advocacy, medical education and governance across general practice.

My career has been grounded in front-line clinical practice and shaped by a deep understanding of the challenges facing GPs, practice owners, doctors in training, supervisors, international medical graduates and the communities we serve. Through my leadership with the RACGP and my academic role at The University of Notre Dame, Fremantle, I have worked to strengthen the profession, support the next generation of doctors and ensure general practice remains central to a high-quality, sustainable health system.

I bring extensive experience in governance, advocacy, education and organisational leadership, together with a commitment to principled decision-making, professional excellence and meaningful outcomes for members.

I remain actively engaged in clinical practice, with particular interests in medical education and women's and children's health. Above all, I am committed to advancing general practice, strengthening the voice of GPs and ensuring our profession is respected, supported and equipped for the future.
