

As Australians face the escalating adverse health impacts of climate change, general practice must actively contribute to the preservation of our environment.

